KPMG Employees volunteer to assist with the Junior Achievement's "Guide for Volunteers and Teachers" program

Fareed Hosein and Kenneth Adumekwe at KPMG have been involved with facilitating the Junior Achievement's (JA) "Guide for Volunteers and Teachers" programme at various Government schools over the past few years.

Fareed became involved in the programme five years ago to teach students “Economics for Success” and other financial aspects as part of their Life Skills curriculum. Kenneth joined the program earlier this year to help facilitate the “Business Ethics” programme. These programmes run for one semester out of the school year and they are able to select a day that fits into their busy schedule to assist the students. The students learn practical lessons and the importance of education and career goals.

Their main focus for teaching these programmes are to benefit the students and hope that they will take away helpful knowledge that will affect their future in a positive way. “I hope my contribution to their learning as part of this programme and overall outlook on the importance of education will be a lasting one.” Fareed said. Kenneth commented “Students undoubtedly benefit by having professionals in the industry passing on their real life working experiences and perspectives which cannot be developed within a rigid academic curriculum.”

Junior Achievement recognises the volunteers of this programme “Together with the support of the volunteers we were able to deliver the JA programme to middle school classrooms in six schools across Grand Cayman and Cayman Brac, reaching over 500 students”, said Programme Director, Tara McField. “I am delighted that KPMG provides their staff with three and half hours per month to volunteer in the community.”

Junior Achievement offers various lessons from the “Guide for Volunteers and Teachers” programme. They reach out to many business professionals who can provide valuable lessons and experience related to the programme. If you are interested in learning more about this programme, contact JA Programme Director, Tara McField on 949-4306 or jacayman@candw.ky.
